Who killed ben defending jacob

We see Leonard writing the suicide note confessing to killing Ben. However, the close focus of the shot means you can't see if anyone else is in the room forcing it. It's deliberately ambiguous. Could Patz really have been forced to write that suicide note without any other pleas, or force on screen? Wonder. O'Leary killed Patz? Yes, again, we don't know! Andy tells his father Billy on the phone that he thinks Patz was him. Billy acutely asks Andy if he's sure, which could be an indicator that he intends to do something about it. O'Leary is his right-wing man on the outside and we know he was tasked with caring for the Barber family, but that doesn't mean he killed Patz. Although police say there were some anomalies at the scene of Patz's death, they ruled it as suicide and Jacob was cleared. Would it really be so easy to fake the suicide of a man by hanging? Would Patz surely have struggled, or left any other evidence, anything in the note perhaps to suggest that he was forced? When Andy asks his father if he did, he repeatedly denies any knowledge even if slightly distilled. Later, when the family is in Mexico, Andy drunkenly tells Laurie that he thinks his father was responsible. But when Laurie asks him who else knows he says no one knows. He's drunk, and so far he hasn't been at all willing to admit that he's ever had any doubts about Jacob's innocence, even when Laurie expressed his fears. Perhaps not surprising, but also not indicative of the veracity that would have been only after the trial, when Jacob is not at risk of going to prison and Andy is completely destroyed, which would have dropped his guard. Laurie tried to kill Jacob? We know that, at least on the TV show. Yes, he did. We see Laurie speeding up the car more and more hysterically asking Jacob if he killed Ben. He says no, and then says yes, but neither answer is reliable since he's afraid for his life. Then he steers them and crashes them headlong to the side of a bridge. He may not have specifically tried to kill him - or even both - but the crash was not an accident. This is one of the plot points that was modified by the book - later. So, what does this mean for barbers? We don't know... But we can guess. If Jacob survives (and it's not a fact) he will know that his mother believes he is a murderer and has tried to kill him. Laurie expresses concern at the end of the final episode that Jacob might not believe it was an accident – does that mean he forgot what he did? Maybe, but unlikely. The darkest ending is that he'll know what he's done, he'll know he knows, and Andy will continue to voluntarily refuse that it was anything but an accident. Is officially established an incident in court after Andy testified saying: It was raining. It was accelerating. It was an accident. What if Jacob was always innocent? Not only does he now know that his mother doesn't believe him, but he also knows that he tried kill him that no one in the world will believe. What if he's guilty? It's almost an appropriate punishment: secrets shared between Jacob and his mother that both know the other is a murderer and neither will ever be believed. The finale of Apple TV+'s Defending Jacob is tragic, but the book handled it a little differently. Because the Apple TV+ series moves away from the source material and doesn't provide absolute clarity, viewers might wonder what everything means and whether the titular character is really a cold-blooded killer. Based on William Landay's 2012 novel of the same name and adapted for television by Mark Bomback, Defending Jacob began his eight-episode series on April 24, 2020 and ended on May 20, 2020. Set in Massachusetts, Defending Jacob revolves around the Barber family. MCU superstar Chris Evans plays the patriarchal figure, a lawyer named Andy Barber. Michelle Dockery (Downton Abbey) plays Andy's wife Laurie, and Jaeden Martell (IT) completes the lead cast in the cast of the couple's 14-year-old son, Jacob. When a local teenager named Ben Rifkin is found dead, Jacob quickly becomes the prime suspect due to comments made on social media, both by him and classmates. In addition, Andy discovers a knife in his son's room - a possible murder weapon - which is what kicks off the story, as the Barbers are not fully convinced that their son is innocent. Prosecutor Neal Logiudice (Pablo Schreiber) finds a way to link Andy's father in prison with Jacob's trial. Meanwhile, the defense attorney, Joanna Klein (Cherry Jones), explains to a trial jury that it's not unusual for a teenager like Jacob to have mature images on his laptop. However, Laurie is convinced that her son is guilty and in tears opens the news to her husband. Everything changes when a local paedophile named Leonard Patz (Daniel Henshall) kills himself and admits to killing Rifkin. As Billy Barber arranged for Leonard Patz's death, the finale of The Defending Jacob reveals that Billy Barber orchestrated Patz's murder. In particular, he enlisted a longtime friend known as Father O'Leary (William Xifaras) to frame and kill the paedophile, which would allow his nephew, Jacob, to receive proof of legal innocence. The great revelation is foreshadowed by several encounters between Andy and Billy, with Billy refusing to offer help. As a character, Billy emphasizes Andy's lifelong guilt. Jacob's father lies about his past to Laurie, and then becomes too hypocritical to accept any help from his father. A apparently, Father O'Leary never wanted to hurt Laurie or Jacob. He was initially spotted by the couple in the city, leaving them uncertain about his motives. When Jacob is officially exonerated, Father O'Leary protects the Barbers from a still angry Dan Rifkin (Patrick Fischer), his father murder victim, Ben. During one last chat in prison, Billy admits to orchestrating the Patz murder, and only so that his nephew could live a relatively normal life. According to Billy, Andy can be a good man or be a good father, comes to choose. Basically, Andy doesn't talk to Laurie about Billy until a family trip to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico. Because The Barber's Mexico Trip Is Important The Barbers' trip to Mexico creates various forms of conflict in Jacob's season finale on defense. On the surface, it allows the family to escape reality as they contemplate an impending move to Denver. Andy and Laurie seem to believe that no one knows who they are in Puerto Vallarta, when in fact a 16-year-old girl named Hope Connors (Jessi Case) immediately recognizes Jacob. The teens plan to spend time together on New Year's Eve, and it is eventually revealed that Hope is missing, with the implication that Jacob may be a serial killer. Before he went to Mexico, Andy wasn't sure if his son was a murderer, but things changed after the trip – and he eventually started alongside Laurie on the matter. Andy and Laurie both remember jacob writing a bizarre story online in which he appears to have confessed to Ben's murder, and now they are faced with yet another tragedy, apparently, that forces Andy to confess the truth about his father. Of course, Laurie panics about the revelation, and once again believes that her son is indeed a murderer. But then Hope shows up, unharmed, after being drugged by holidaymakers. Andy's drunken emotional breakdown effectively divides the family. The lack of trust in Jacob destroys both parents; they can't know for sure if their son is innocent. Defending Jacob's car accident explained Although Jacob didn't kill Hope in Mexico, Laurie becomes more suspicious than ever about the Rifkin murder. She was forced to settle Andy's lies about the past, and now she can't find clarity in the present. During a drive with Jacob, the indoor and outdoor noise becomes too much for Laurie to endure. Outside, rain pours in and makes navigation difficult. Inside, Jacob's continued silence keeps the dark thoughts swirling in Laurie's head. At this point, he just wants a definitive answer, and then asks his son if he killed Ben. Jacob is initially surprised, and then frightened while his mother drives erratically. Just as a single thought crushed Andy's psyche in Mexico, a 14-year-old. Unlike Jacob, Leonard Patz is an adult adult who must be responsible for his decisions. Defending Jacob implies that Billy framed Patz, but it is also very likely that Patz actually killed Ben and then accepted his fate. And so, the argument can be made for both Jacob and Patz. The dark truth may be that someone else in the community could be the real killer - someone who constantly appears on camera but never shows any suspicious behavior. The main takeaway is that danger always lurks within close-knit communities, and that having a friendly smile cannot be used in court as proof of innocence. Jacob is targeted because he is a social outcast with obvious communication problems. Because the Defending Jacob Book Ending Is More Tragic Defending Jacob deviates from the book's harrowing ending. In Landay's source material, the Barbers go to Jamaica (rather than Mexico), and Jacob actually meets a girl named Hope Connors. But while the TV series reveals that Hope has simply disappeared, the book ends with her body discovered on a beach, and that she was probably strangled to death. From there, the book becomes even darker: Laurie's accident causes Jacob's death, and she barely survives. In Apple TV+'s Defending Jacob, there's a somewhat promising ending as the Barbers all survive. On the other hand, the final image shows Andy sitting in his son's room, still in the dark, which suggests that Jacob's potential off-screen death essentially closes the door to clarity - not only about Ben's murder, but also about whether he can forgive his mother, Laurie.
